Gov. Graves Appoints Wife To Succeed Senator Black; Calls Election For April 26

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama appointed his wife, Dixie Bibb Graves, today to succeed Hugo L. Black as Senator from Alabama.

The Governor announced Mrs. Graves's appointment immediately after Black tendered his resignation from the Senate.

Mrs. Graves will serve only temporarily. The Governor called a special election for next April 26 to name a senator to fill Black's unexpired term, which ends in January, 1939.

He said Mrs. Graves would not be a candidate, and that the Alabama constitution barred him from the race.

The State Democratic Committee, he said, would call a special primary some time after February 1 to nominate a candidate for the April 26 election.

Graves said that immediately after the primary he would appoint the Democratic nominee to the Senate to succeed Mrs. Graves.

Senator John H. Bankhead, who became Alabama's senior senator, with Black's resignation, said he would present Mrs. Graves's credentials to the Senate tomorrow and ask that she be sworn immediately.

The Governor explained in a formal statement he wished to guard against giving any candidate the advantage of being the incumbent in next year's primary.

"In my judgment," the statement concluded, "Dixie Bibb Graves is in all respects best fitted to serve in this ad interim appointment and to carry out the policies above mentioned."

Mrs. Graves, 55 years old, is known in Alabama as an effective campaigner for her husband, although she has never been a candidate. She will be the fourth woman to serve in the Senate, all of them from the South. Mrs. Hattie Caraway of Arkansas is the only one now serving.

The Governor's choice of an election date opens the way for Alabama congressmen to seek the Senate vacancy without resigning from the House. Five were considered likely candidates — Lister Hill, of Montgomery; Frank W. Boykin, of Mobile; Henry B. Steagall, of Ozark; Joe Starnes, of Guntersville, and Sam Hobbs, of Selma.

Alabamians explained the April 26 election would be only a formality, because nomination by the Democratic party in that State is tantamount to election.

The Governor arrived here last night with Mrs. Graves to clear the way for her appointment. He conferred at length this morning with Marvin H. McIntyre, secretary to the President.

Senators said efforts were made today by some persons to dissuade him from naming his wife. It was generally understood, however, the appointee would be sworn in without any strenuous objection in the Senate.

The Governor made the announcement after a two-hour conference with Black, Bankhead, and Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the Senate.

He emphasized that a primary called this year would be valuable because approximately 100,000 voters had failed to pay their poll tax. This is an "off year" for elections.

Black resigned from the Senate within a few hours after receiving from President Roosevelt his commission as a justice. He said he had not made any definite arrangements for taking an oath of office.

"In tendering my resignation as senator," he said in a letter to Graves, "I wish to express my sincere gratitude and appreciation to the people of Alabama for the great honor they conferred upon me in selecting me as one of their representatives in the United States Senate.

"I have endeavored to show that appreciation by giving to them and to the people of our country the best service of which I am capable. As an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States I shall do my very best to merit a continuation of the confidence of the people. x x x".

Accepting the resignation, Gov. Graves wrote that "no official act of all my life has been done with as much reluctance as is the acceptance of this resignation."

Graves expected to remain in Washington long enough to see his wife take the oath as senator, then proceed to Indianapolis by plane for the national convention of Young Democrats.

Senator Bankhead, who has remained silent throughout the discussion of a successor to Black, declined comment on the Governor's choice, but promised "to cooperate in every way possible during Mrs. Graves's brief term in the Senate."

Throughout the long conferences today, Mrs. Graves stayed in the background, except to greet friends at her hotel room. She had joked with callers about the report she was scheduled for the appointment, and laughed heartily each time a friend addressed her as "Senator."

Mrs. Graves, known to many Alabamians here as "Miss Dixie," is no stranger to official Washington. She has accompanied her husband on many previous trips to the capital, and is said to be one of his most trusted advisers.

REVIVAL IS IN PROGRESS AT ELBA BAPTIST CHURCH

Revival services at the Baptist Church, which began last Sunday morning, are growing in interest and the attendance is good. Morning services are held at 10:45 o'clock, instead of 10:45 as was announced last week, and the evening services begin at 7:45.

Dr. H. G. Ketchum, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Jackson, Ala., is doing the preaching. He is an evangelist of wide experience and is bringing some soul-stirring messages. The song services are in charge of Rev. J. Byron Head, of Whistler, a splendid singer and leader.

Rev. J. A. Timmerman, pastor of the church, invites every person in Elba to be present at all the services.

Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Kendrick and children, Olive Ray and J. Douglas, returned Monday night from a short visit to Gulf Shores Beach near Panama City. They had as their guests Misses Ida Isabel Whitman and Mary Will Kendrick.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dennis and little daughter visited Mr. Dennis's parents in Panama City Sunday. Little Miss Virginia Dennis returned with them for a visit.

REV. GLENN WILL PREACH AT M. E. CHURCH SUNDAY

The fourth quarterly conference of the Elba Charge, M. E. Church, South, will be held in Elba next Sunday, August 29. Rev. B. C. Glenn, presiding elder of the Troy District, will preach at 11:00 o'clock. All members of the church are urged to be present at this service.

The business session of the conference will be held at 2:30 p.m., and officers of the church as well as officers of the different organizations are urged to have their reports ready at this time. A full attendance is desired.

Miss Mary Katherine Haire has returned from Troy, where she attended the summer session at State Teachers College.

WALLACE ASKS 9-CENT LOAN ON THIS YEAR'S COTTON CROP

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—Secretary Wallace urged President Roosevelt at a luncheon conference today to announce a loan of nine cents a pound on this year's cotton.

He told reporters afterward that there could be no decision on the loan rate and other conditions until a meeting of the Commodity Credit Corporation later in the week to study data gathered by Department of Agriculture experts and economists.

Wallace confends a nine-cent loan would permit American cotton to sell in world markets, and that growers could be assured a total return of 12 cents by additional subsidy payments of up to three cents. Some members of Congress advocate a 10-cent loan and two-cent subsidy, arguing that policy would give producers a higher immediate return and cost the Treasury less in the end.

The subsidy payments, authorized by Congress shortly before it went home Saturday, will be payable next year to farmers who comply with a proposed crop control program.

Asked by reporters today whether he considers a special session of Congress necessary this Fall, Wallace replied he always has favored such a session. Previously he said he considered crop loans unwise unless accompanied by crop control measures preventing surpluses like those of 1932.

Officials said details of the 1937-1938 cotton loan program have not yet been drafted.

In general, they asserted, the loan plan probably will follow the lines of the 10-cent a pound loan program of 1934-35, but the exact stipulations can not be decided until after the meeting of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Under the first loan program growers stored their cotton under Government supervision and received loans of 10 cents a pound on it. Local committees did much of the work of administration.

When the funds for new loans are made available farmers probably will make application again to county committees and county agents, fill out the necessary papers for submission to State and regional offices of the AAA and, upon approval, receive checks for the amount of the loans.

What growers must do to get the additional subsidy payments next year depends, it was said, on legislation to be enacted by Congress later in the session.

Whether they will be asked to sign production control contracts again will be decided by Congress, officials added.

FARMERS URGED TO KEEP RECORDS ON 1937 COTTON

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—R. J. Goode, Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries, urged Alabama farmers recently "to be sure and keep accounts on cotton."

Insistency that accounts be kept, Goode said, was prompted by President Roosevelt's agreement to approve crop loans and price adjustment payment on the 1937 crop.

"Every farmer," he said, "should keep the date of sale, to whom sold, at what price, the grade and staple rating.

"All will be eligible for the benefits, but if a man is unable to prove the amount received he may not get the price adjustment payment."

Goode had just returned from Washington, where he acted as spokesman for Southern agricultural commissioners in prevailing on Congress and the President to reach agreement on passage of a farm program next session and immediate assurance of loans and price adjustment payments to keep prices up.

"I estimate," the commissioner said, "that the agreement reached will benefit cotton farmers $300,000,000 on the 1937 crop alone."

Price adjustment payments will be based on difference between 12 cents and the average price on 10 major spot markets, Goode said.

While amount of loan per pound has not been definitely determined, Goode said, he anticipated it would be "nine or ten cents."

The commissioner claimed credit for writing the congressional resolution which pledged Congress to immediate enactment of farm legislation at its next session and brought from President Roosevelt agreement to make loans and price adjustment payments this year.

ELBA MUST HAVE A BANK

Citizens of Elba and this trade territory have not had complete banking facilities since the early fall of 1931, when the doors of the First National Bank were closed. During these six years the Elba Merchants Exchange has been in operation, through the cooperation of merchants, business men and Mr. J. F. Brunson, manager of the Exchange. It is useless for us to recount here the benefits that have accrued to the business life of Elba by the establishment of the Exchange and the service that has been rendered by its manager, and to express the wish that it could continue to operate.

But the Elba Merchants Exchange, as it is now constituted, cannot continue its operations. Banking authorities, both State and Federal, have given notice that it must be converted into a legal banking institution or else close its doors. Just how long they will let the Exchange operate is not known, but definite announcement is made that the change must be made; and it is not hoped to stay the matter longer than a few weeks.

Citizens of Elba well know what the closing of the Exchange will mean to the business life of the city and community. They need only to be reminded of the pitiful plight in which we found ourselves in October, 1931, when we were caught without banking facilities. The condition will be just as serious now as it was then.

ELBA MUST HAVE A BANK, and citizens of Elba and this section of the county must furnish the capital. Efforts have been made heretofore to organize a bank but without success. We do not know the cause of these failures and it would do no good to discuss them. What we want now is that the time has arrived when it is imperative that every citizen of the community become interested in the matter and lend every assistance possible in the establishment of a banking institution here.

Mr. J. F. Brunson, manager of the Exchange, has been working on the proposition for several months and has plans which he will be glad to discuss with anyone interested. Immediate action is vitally important to every person in Elba—not only to the business man, but to everyone who really has the welfare of the town at heart. Think it over seriously and see if there is not something YOU can do, and then act accordingly. Do this right now—TODAY!

About People and Things
By C. B. McDowell

TEN LOCKS—E. L. Free, Beat 20, takes the honors this week with the ten-lock cotton bell which he brought to The Clipper office, surpassing by four locks the one mentioned in this column last week. It was on the Charles Rowe place by Noah Helms, The ordinary boll has four locks.

REGULAR JUNK PILE—I have heard of human sword-swallowers, nail-eaters, etc., but Jim Hurd of the Zion Chapel community recently brought to The Clipper office a collection of thirteen steel and brass tacks, harness clips, brads, etc., taken from the gizzard of a frying-size chicken, run over and killed by a car. The combination made a small handful of junk that one would suppose would kill any living thing that swallowed it, except possibly an ostrich, which delights in swallowing such things as watches, jewelry, etc., but Mr. Hurd said the chicken appeared to be hale, hearty and perfectly normal prior to its demise. Wonder if this shouldn't remind us that perhaps many times our chickens do not get sufficient grit to satisfy their needs?

INTERESTING TRIP—Miss Mary Nell Dawkins returned home Monday from a two-weeks visit with her sister, Mrs. I. A. Douglas, in New Orleans. Miss Dawkins gives an interesting account of her visit to the great Huey Long State capitol building at Baton Rouge, which will stand as a monument to his memory for many years to come.

HANDSOME TRUCK—There is another pretty truck driver in Elba, and justly so. Jordan Lindsey has recently purchased a new truck with long trailer body, built by Dorsey Brothers. It is equipped with radio 'n' everything, and James Wise who makes frequent trips between Elba and Mobile says a fellow needs something of the kind to relieve the monotony and keep him awake when he has to be out on the road for five hours at a stretch, especially at all hours of the night. The truck is a beauty.

CHEAP GINNING—Both Elba gins, also the Whitman Gin Company, are advertising the unusually cheap price of $3.00 per bale for ginning cotton. While there can't be much profit in such prices, cotton farmers in this territory will reap the benefit. Billy Perdue, employed at the Brown gin, seems to feel worse about the exceedingly cheap price than Mr. Brown himself.

PLENTY SOON—Mary Oswell, six-year-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oswell Dowling, recently told her mother that she wanted to get up the next morning "real soon while it was still black daylight."

OPEN COTTON—The several days of hot sunshine that have made cotton bolls pop open with a vengeance. It is said that there is more open cotton in the fields of Coffee County right now than there has been at any one time in several years. The fields are well populated with cotton-pickers, but the daily showers of the past several days have retarded picking considerably. However, the gins are running day and night in an effort to keep pace with the streams of wagons and trucks that are bringing in the fleecy staple from all directions.

CONFUSING—Cotton growers are somewhat confused over the market situation. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace recommends to Government loan with a three-cent subsidy to be paid next year to those who sign up and participate in a crop-control program to be worked out by the next session of Congress. Senator Bankhead is making an earnest plea for a two-cent peg and a two-cent subsidy. He urges farmers not to sell their cotton until the matter is settled. Many of our most successful cotton growers are firm in their belief that it never pays to hold cotton and advise everyone to sell as soon as possible. It is unquestionably better for business in general for growers to sell their cotton as soon as ginned.

CATALOGS GALORE—A large truck unloaded 821 Sears & Roebuck catalogs at the Elba postoffice one evening last week, which was more than the number dumped off at Enterprise, Daleville and New Brockton, combined. Elba is recognized as one of the banner mail-order postoffices of the whole country. This is a distinction of which we should not be very proud, as it shows that our merchants are not advertising their wares and putting forth the proper effort to

SANITARIUM PROJECT WILL BE DISCUSSED HERE SEPT. 2

Members of Commissioners' Courts, County Health Officers, members of County Medical Societies, representatives of the State Health Department and a number of other interested citizens from the counties of Pike, Dale, Geneva and Covington have been invited to a meeting at Elba next Thursday, September 2, at which time a general discussion will be had on the proposed plan of establishing a joint Tuberculosis Sanitarium for the benefit of the four counties mentioned above and Coffee.

The Coffee County Medical Society has its regular meeting on this date and will be hosts to the visiting medicos and county officials at a barbecue dinner. It is announced that the business session proper will be held in the afternoon, when the possibilities of establishing the sanitarium will be discussed from every angle.

Coffee County Commissioners in session at Elba Monday appointed a committee for the purpose of acting in the matter, which is the first official move that has been made. The County Medical Society's meeting on next Thursday offered a splendid opportunity for a general get-together, when the entire project can be discussed.

Coffee is ideally located and as pointed out recently by Judge Carnley in a letter to The Troy Messenger, already has a tract of land on the high hill East of Elba which would be a very suitable place. Officials of Coffee are willing to cooperate in this matter and it is hoped that some workable plans may be laid out at the meeting next Tuesday, with the county delegates and other organizations of the five counties cooperating.

Health Notes
By W. A. DODSON, M. D.
County Health Officer

The Bureau of Sanitation of the State Health Department has published some interesting information regarding Brill's or typhus fever. This appears in the August issue of the Journal of the Medical Association of State of Alabama. It is stated that the first case in Alabama was reported in 1922. In 1933 there was an alarming increase with 823 cases reported and 55 deaths. Health authorities inaugurated a State-wide rat control campaign with C. W. A. funds and more than three-fourths of a million premises were poisoned and trapped. The rat population was reduced materially and the disease was checked. In 1934, following this program, there were only 271 cases reported, with 16 deaths.

Each year there has been an increase in the disease, with 295 cases in 1935 and 360 in 1936. It is stated that rat proofing and sanitation are fundamental to permanent reduction of the rat population and can only be accomplished by intelligent building and competent engineering standards of construction, strict sanitary regulations in regard to food products, and a continuous warfare on rats.

It is evident that the people have not learned the value of rat control not only in health but in dollars and cents saved. Rats not only have to multiply and approach their former numbers. With their increase there has been a corresponding increase in Brill's disease and financial loss. In one small community of Coffee County there have been six cases of this disease during the current month. This makes a total of twenty-one reported cases for 1937.

The best time for controlling rats is to begin poisoning and trapping before harvest time. They will take bait much more easily when the crib and barns are empty of peanuts, corn and other natural food. Be sure to start this work at once to protect your family and rid yourself of rat expense. If you have not yet received a bulletin from the Health Department, then ask for it or see the farm agent for assistance.

THIS MUSICAL WORLD

The piano makers report the biggest business in many years. Not long ago piano sales had fallen off so that many thought the industry was on its last legs. The radio was killing it, they said.

Now it turns out that radio has stimulated interest in music so that Young America is feeling the urge, as never before, to produce its own music. The whole musical instrument market is experiencing a boom. Nobody knows how many aspiring boys and girls are learning to toot trumpets and saxophones, play the fiddle or the steel guitar, or do musical tricks with strange instruments, but the total must run into millions. And that doesn't take in the budding crooners, torch singers and tap-dancers. Among the most popular programs on the air are the amateur hours, when ambitious musical youngsters strut their stuff. The volume and quality of the talent and near-talent which these affairs bring into the open is an index of the current enthusiasm for self-made music.

There isn't much wrong with a world that is full of music.

THE COST OF DISTRIBUTION

It used to cost a dollar to get a dollars' worth of goods into the hands of the customer. Now, according to some recent studies by economists, it costs nearly a dollar and a half. If that is so, it would seem to have some bearing on the perpetual bugaboo of the high cost of living.

Perhaps in all of the schemes and plans which we have been trying, in the effort to bring about an economic balance between production and consumption, we have been tackling the problem from the wrong end. Perhaps the trouble is not over-production but underconsumption, and that comes about because too many middlemen take a toll along the highways of commerce, between the producer and the consumer.

It certainly seems logical to believe that the producer could get just as much, and sell more goods if people did not have to pay that toll of $1.50 on every dollar's worth the producer sells. The producer might even be able to sell cheaper if more people bought his goods.

Of course, the people and agencies who carry goods to market have to be paid for their services, but do we need so many of them, especially when it comes to the necessities of life? It seems reasonable that of a lot of the wholesalers, jobbers, commission men and others who stand between the producer and the retailer could be cut out, there would be a considerable saving which the retailer could pass on to the consumer.

If that is so, then there is something queer about the tendency to pass laws penalizing the producers who do their own distributing to consumers, and legalizing the fixing of minimum prices.

BUMPER CROPS AGAIN

The largest cotton crop in six years, the largest wheat crop since 1931 and the largest corn crop in five years have combined to bring the agricultural situation to the fore again, and to revive interest in and discussion of crop control. In the case of wheat the estimate of nearly 900 million bushels will not create a surplus and cause a serious drop in the price the farmer gets, because there have been serious crop failures in several of the great wheat-growing countries.

Wheat is a world crop whose price is fixed in the international markets according to the still unrepealed law of supply and demand.

The bumper crops of the feeding grains, corn, oats and barley, foreshadow an increase in livestock production. The effect of that will not be felt this year, however.

The cotton crop is giving the greatest concern. This is another international crop, whose price is fixed in the world market, and the forecast of a large surplus production above domestic consumption caused a sudden drop on the New York Cotton Exchange to 10 cents a pound. That revived the demand for the continuance of Federal warehouse loans on cotton, and the President has agreed to that in return for a Congressional promise to take up crop control legislation at the next session.

The crop control system under AAA was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Whether a method can be found which will at once be practical, not too costly and in harmony with the Constitutional limitations of Federal powers remains to be seen.

LEGUMES VALUABLE IN CONTROLLING EROSION

AUBURN, Ala.—Austrian winter peas, hairy vetch and crimson clover can be used by farmers in controlling erosion on their farms.

On land with a 5-per cent slope the soil losses on an acre planted to vetch were only 3,784 pounds compared with 27,564 pounds per acre without vetch.

On land with a 10-per cent slope the losses were 6,392 pounds following vetch compared with 90,218 without vetch.

On land with a 15-per cent slope the losses were 14,767 pounds following vetch compared with 135,179 without vetch.

On land with a 20-per cent slope the losses totaled 19,675 pounds following vetch compared with 182,562 pounds without vetch.

Sheet erosion, not revealed by the tell-tale gullies, is amazingly destructive.

Lights of New York

Wings: Jack Price tells of the salesman stranded in Buffalo who was wondering how he would get to Rochester. Into the hotel strolled a wealthy friend who offered him free transportation in one of those master-powered cars about a block and a half long. After getting out of the city, they struck an eight-lane highway and bowled along well over 90 m. p. h. In a little while, a motorcycle cop succeeded in tagging them.

"Are you in a hurry?" he asked, leaning on the shiny gas chariot.

"Yes," replied the owner. "My friend here has to get to Rochester."

"Officer, are you giving me a ticket for speeding?" asked the car owner who, up to that moment, had thought he was getting away with it.

"Speeding nothing," drawled the law. "I'm giving you a ticket for flying too low."

Old Urge: It seems that a riding club got into difficulties to such an extent that assets had to be liquidated. Recently, a buyer came along and turned the club into a riding school. Finding that demand exceeded the supply of blooded horses, he went into the open market and made purchases. The other afternoon, a patron set out for the nearest park. To get there, he had to cross an avenue. An ambulance was approaching at a rapid rate. Seeing the rider, the driver, instead of sounding his siren, rang the gong. The gentleman on horseback fell off at the end of the block. And the old fire horse, finding it only a false alarm, finally wandered back. And now there is a heavy damage suit in the offing.

Truth: A friend, who on occasions delivers lectures to college students here and there over the country, has just returned from his spring trip with a tale of woe. It seems that at a certain university, the chairman introduced him as a fine upstanding young man, a leader in his community, respected and looked up to, and a happy husband for the last seventeen years. From then on, whenever the lecturer passed a fair co-ed, she addressed him as "Mr." and treated him with the utmost courtesy. But that was all. Meanwhile, others on the program, including some gentlemen older and married longer, received smiles and had fair company no matter where they wandered on the campus. The lecturer's wife is trying to design an appropriate medal to send to that chairman.

Woe: For some reason or other, generally when I board a taxi, especially late at night, the driver makes me a confidant. Last evening, coming uptown, the man at the wheel, after muttering to himself for some time, turned around and announced that piloting a taxi was the lowest occupation in the world.

"The cops bawl you out," he continued. "The public bawls you out. Then when you go home, the old woman gives you hell."

How Does Cow Chew? Baffles Uncle Sam

Washington.—How meticulous is Uncle Sam was revealed recently in connection with the building of a mechanical cow which was to be included in an agricultural exhibit.

The exhibitors wanted to show the papier mache creature chewing hay, but were stumped by the jaw motion. They asked the government livestock specialists how a cow chews, but none knew; so a delegation was sent out into the pastures for a day or so to observe the habits of cows.

The experts found that even the same cow chewed differently in the morning from the way she did at night—sometimes prevailingly to the left and sometimes to the right.

FARMER JONES AND HIS COW PEN

By JUDGE W. M. BRUNSON

PINE—I have about decided that the word pine is about the most important word to the farmers of this section. Our lumber, fuel, posts and paper seem to be coming from the humble pine tree. It seems to me that the pine tree is one of our greatest benefactors, if not the greatest. It would hardly be possible for me to say too much in favor of the lowly pine. It has been called the "Lonesome Pine" and it might be that the tree is lonesome, but it certainly will bring you some mighty good company if you will only protect it for a few years. I doubt that it would be possible for me to say too much or to pay too high a tribute to the pine tree and its family.

PINE MASS—It seems that Mr. Webster never knew the word "Pine-Mass," but it is well known in this section and I shall use it in this article. Mr. Webster speaks of a pine-nut which he says grows in the pine cone, but we Southerners never speak of the seed of a pine tree as pine-nuts. We know it as pine-mass and I think that is the correct name for it. I'm afraid that most farmers do not stop to study the habits of the pine tree. I fear that we do not even know when the tree bears fruit or seed. Many farmers out in my section have the idea that pine trees produce pine-mass every year. This is not true as a rule and you will be surprised if you will make a close study of the subject. The pine trees put on a crop of cones about every three or four years. Some of the cones do not fall from the trees and you are often led to believe you have a crop of pine-mass when you have a few old cones left in the tree tops. There are a few pine cones every year but they are scattered and are not sufficient to do any great amount of good in reforestation work. When we do have a crop of pine-mass we should throw every precaution around this crop and see to it that it is not destroyed by fire. Let us suppose that we do not have a crop of pine-mass for three years and you keep fire out of your woods for three years, but we do have a good crop of pine-mass the fourth year and you allow your woods to be burned off on the fourth year, and then you do not have another crop of pine-mass for another three years. This would mean that one fire would destroy your chances for a crop of pine trees for a period of six or seven years. If the same thing should happen again you would lose your chance to grow young pine trees during this generation. It seems that we do not have a crop of pine-mass this year but we should not allow our woods to be burned as there are a few small trees which might be destroyed or injured by the fire. I'm guessing that we shall have a good crop of pine-mass next year and if we do we should go to the limit in protecting same. There are several things to be done in an effort to protect pine-mass but the one great thing is to see to it that your woods are not burned over at any time. The next best thing to do is to see to it that your woodland land is in a pasture as pine-mass will come up better where you have cattle. Three strands of barbed wire around your woods will more than pay for itself in helping to grow timber. If you will pasture on your woodland land and keep fire out of it you will not need any advice from the Forestry Department or any trees shipped in for planting. Every acre of your wild land will grow you as much as one dollar each year in timber while your best acres will grow you twice that amount. Pulp wood may be grown in ten years while twenty years or more will be required to grow trees large enough for timber. Your wild land is worth just as much to you as is your cultivated land, provided you take advantage of its value. We may graze the land while the timber is small and we can have some grazing all the time if we will destroy worthless trees. Nothing is more profitable than the work of cutting out the crooked or worthless trees from our woods. All your stove wood and fire wood can be cut from the trees which you do not care to protect and this should be done consistently. If you protect your pines from fire and cut out the worthless ones you will reap a great profit from your woodland land. But we must understand how the pine-mass works and we must protect it if we are to be successful in reforesting our lands.

FIRE PROTECTION — Several men have talked to me about the work of building fire roads or fire breaks in their woods. I'm glad to know that some of our farmers are beginning to wake up to the most valuable asset on their farms. There seem to be some mistaken ideas out as to how we may protect our woods from fire. Some seem to think that they must build expensive fire breaks or plow up wide roads through woods if they are protected from fire. It is all right to do these things if you have the time and the labor to do them but I can give you a plan which will work beautifully and which will not cost you a thin dime. About the time the straw and leaves have finished falling is the time for you to do your advance work. There is no certain time to do this work, but you should be sure to do it before the woods are burned off and it is best to wait until all the leaves and straw are on the ground. I would suggest that this work be done about December 1st if the leaves are off the trees. Tie a sack to the end of a pole and saturate the sack with kerosene oil. If you do not have the oil you may use a bundle of straw or a bunch of fat roots tied together with hay wire. Set fire to your bundle and drag it along through the woods where you would like for your fire road to be. Permit the fire to burn for about ten minutes and until it has burned a strip about thirty feet wide. Then take green pine tops and put it out. One man can put out the fire and two others can come along and put it out and the three of you can go several miles in one day. You should burn these fire roads from your field to the branches and you should not leave more than five or ten acres in each block of unburned territory. This work should be done at a time when the straw will burn but when the wind is not blowing. You should use a pine top about ten feet long and after you learn the art of putting out fire with such a top you will feel like kicking yourself for not keeping the fire out before. It is possible for you to take a ten-foot pine brush or top and put out fire that is burning three feet high. You can put it out so fast and so easy that you will laugh at yourself when you are through. Any farmer would know when to burn his fire roads, as he has had experience with such things for many years. The important thing to do is to burn the roads and do it before some ignoramus burns the woods for you. I would suggest that you use the same roads each year and that you make them just as narrow as you think will be safe. A twenty- or thirty-foot road through your timber will not be a loss to you, as the timber will soon close in on this road. After you have burned your fire roads you should keep a watch out for fire and see to it that it does not burn over one of your blocks. If some one puts out fire you can stop it as it will not go out of that block. If you are a good fire fighter you can put it out before it burns the first block. This will be a great timber section as soon as we learn the art of protecting our woods from the ravages of fire. That man who pretends to own land and willingly permits it to be burned over should not be allowed to keep it, as he is committing a crime against an unborn generation. If public sentiment was as it should be no man could live in a community who deliberately put out fire in the woods.

Pruning forest trees in a farm woodland will clear off the dead branches and allow the trees to grow clear and clean and relatively free from knots.

Good neighbors fight erosion. They do not let silt from their farms destroy the other fellow's fields farther downstream.

Strength During MIDDLE LIFE

Strength is extra-important for women going through the change of life. Then the body needs the very best nourishment to fortify it against the changes that are taking place.

In such cases, Cardui has proved helpful to many women. It increases the appetite and aids digestion, favoring more complete transformation of food into living tissue, resulting in improved nutrition and building up and strengthening of the whole system.

CONCRETE . . . costs less

Strong, rigid concrete pavement distributes the load over the subgrade as no other pavement of comparable cost can do. As a result—concrete withstands the punishment of a rapid succession of big buses and high speed trucks and trailers through summer heat and winter cold. Concrete can take it! As Henry Ford has said — the modern concrete highway is "unbeatable."

On great super-highways, as on 2-lane pavements—the first cost of concrete is less than that of any other pavement of equal load-carrying capacity—and of course upkeep is less—and driving costs are less and comfort and visibility and safety are greater.

THE PENTHOUSE MURDER

BY CALEB JOHNSON

SECOND INSTALLMENT

"I agree with Doane," said Henderson. "I'm funny that way, but the sight of bloodshed, or even the thought of it, turns me sick at my stomach. You gentlemen, in the police and the District Attorney's office, and practicing criminal law, naturally take it as part of the day's work. I'm going to have another drink before we get back to the business of the evening. Will you join me?"

Only Doane accepted, and the two drank another highball each while the others resumed their seats at the card table and Frazier gave his closest scrutiny to them.

Williams, he speedily decided, was a long-chance player, a victim of insatiable curiosity who cared little whether he won or lost so long as he got action for his money. Henderson, however, puzzled him.

Twice, when Flaherty was certain the other was bluffing and bet heavily upon that belief, Henderson fooled him by showing the winning hand. Yet more than once, when the Inspector had folded a good hand of his own, convinced that the inventor held higher cards, the other had laughingly shown a worthless hand as he raked in the pot.

"Sorry I started anything disagreeable, gentlemen," Michaelis apologized again. "Dan, you ought not to talk shop when you're out in company."

"I'll talk nothing but poker from now on," grunted the Inspector. "It's a cold, dark night and I crave excitement."

"The excitement begins right now, Dan," said Max Michaelis. "Table stakes, all jackpots, I believe? Then I'll take the lid off this one."

He shoved a stack of blue chips into the middle of the table and the game was on.

"Poker isn't a game of cards; it's a game of human nature," was one of Dan Flaherty's aphorisms. After a few hands had been played he could tell more about the character of the others at the table than an ordinary man would learn by months of intimate association. With the poker technique of Martin Frazier, Archie Doane and Max Michaelis, he was already sufficiently familiar to estimate almost to a two-spot the probable contents of their hands, by their expressions and manner when making their bets. Michaelis' friend, Williams, and the host of the evening, Elmer Henderson, were strangers, and the veteran detective

Archie Doane, however, was not playing in his usual form. It was clear to Dan Flaherty that something was worrying the actor. It was not hard to guess that his thoughts were upon Lydia Lane and the possibility that the rendezvous which had kept Stephen Fitzgerald from joining the party in Henderson's bungalow had some connection with her absence from her own apartment. Doane was playing mechanically, without enthusiasm, seldom backing his hand and then, as often as not, laying down what would have been winning cards. His customary brilliant and courageous style of play was noticeably absent, and Flaherty was not surprised when, after an hour and a half, he announced that he had had enough.

"Don't let me break up the game, gentlemen," he said. "There still will be five of you. I'm not up to it tonight, that's all."

He settled for the several hundred dollars' worth of chips which he had lost, took a final drink and said good night.

Henderson escorted Doane to the elevator.

"Archie's worried about his girl," said Flaherty, as soon as the two were out of earshot. "He isn't any too sure of her."

"My guess is that Henderson's a bit touched in the same quarter," suggested Frazier. "He was pretty quick to come to her defense, when I made that bad break a while ago."

"I'm not on," said Max Michaelis. "Who's the dame?"

"I forgot you weren't here," Frazier apologized. "I made a fool break about Lydia Lane and both Henderson and Archie snapped me up. If Henderson isn't sweet on her, then I'm a bad guesser. But Archie announced that he's going to marry her."

"Lydia Lane, eh?" echoed Max Michaelis. "Well, there are plenty of 'em in the pictures with worse reputations than hers. I don't know much about her, as a matter of fact, except that she's a good looker and never has been mixed up in a public scandal. Archie ought to know what he's about."

"But Henderson seems to be as good a sport in love as he is at cards," he continued. "If you're right, that is, about his having had aspirations in the fair Lydia's direction. A game little chap, I should say. Sensitive and high strung, but certainly under splendid self-control."

"He's a great poker player, all right," grunted Dan Flaherty.

Henderson rejoined them and the game was resumed, with the stacks of chips in front of the host of the evening steadily increasing.

"My lucky night, I guess," he said, after he had raked in another big pot, half an hour or so after Archie Doane's departure. "It's eleven o'clock, and that's drinking time. Deal me out this hand, please. I told my man he could go down to play pinochle with the night watchman in the basement, and I'll have to find the whiskey myself."

"Yes, he's a good poker player, in spite of his calling it luck," said Frazier, after Henderson had left the room. "I told you he was, didn't I, Dan?"

"I'd like to sit in with him when his luck's out, before I committed myself," responded the detective. "He's a good winner, but I've a hunch that he's the sort that would turn vicious if he lost when losing really meant anything to him. Rolling in money just now, and doesn't care whether he wins or loses at cards."

Max Michaelis nodded approvingly and seemed about to make some comment, when Henderson reentered the room. They had another round of drinks and resumed their game. Somewhat less than half an hour later the telephone rang.

Henderson answered the call. "It's for you, Inspector," he called, his hand over the transmitter. "Are you here or not?"

"I'll answer," said Flaherty, rising. "I always leave word at Headquarters where to get me. They wouldn't call unless it was something important. Hello! Inspector Flaherty speaking."

"What! The hell you say! . . . . Where are you now?"

There was a long silence in the room. Max Michaelis, watching the Inspector's face from where he sat, saw it grow tense as the Inspector listened. Then Flaherty's voice again.

"Both dead? All right; stay right there. Don't touch anything. I'll be right over. What's the address? . . . Okay, Archie . . . Don't lose your nerve . . . What's that? . . . Sure, I'll bring him with me."

"Get your coat on, Max," he said. "There's hell to pay. Lydia Lane and Stephen Fitzgerald have been killed in the girl's apartment. That was Archie Doane phoning. He found 'em!"

"Lydia dead!" gasped Henderson. He turned white and seemed about to fall from his chair. Frazier's hand on his shoulder steadied him.

"Murdered?" cried Williams. "After what we were talking about, too!"

"Archie found them?" Frazier of the District Attorney's office spoke almost simultaneously with the other two.

"Yes, and he wants you to come with me, Max," replied Inspector Flaherty, addressing Michaelis again. "You might come, too, Frazier. No use guessing what's up, but it looks like a double murder, and . . . well, Archie's in a difficult position."

He turned to the telephone again and dialled Spring 3100 while the others, stunned, could only sit and stare at each other.

"Inspector Flaherty speaking," they heard him say. "Let me speak to Larkin . . . Then give me anybody who's in the Bureau. . . . Homicide Bureau? Is Detective Martinelli there? . . . Tony, this is Inspector Flaherty . . . I'm uptown . . . Get hold of the Medical Examiner or his deputy right away. You go with him to 213 West 59th, Miss Lane's apartment."

He turned from the phone to the others. "What floor's it on, any of you know?"

"On the roof," replied Henderson, setting down the glass which he had just drained. "Penthouse apartment."

"It's one of the penthouse apartments," said Flaherty into the telephone. "Take a camera man and a Bertillon man with fingerprint equipment along with you. You'll find a man named Archie Doane there—at least, I think you will. Don't ask him any questions, but just what there is to see until I get there. I may be there ahead of you, but if I'm not, don't let Doane go without word from me. Better phone the precinct and have 'em send a uniform man to hold anybody who tries to leave the building before you get there. Tell them at the precinct the instructions are to let nobody in or out without orders from me. Got that? . . . And, Tony. . . ."

"You don't really suspect Archie did it, do you, Dan?" Max Michaelis interrupted. The Inspector waved his hand for silence. "I suspect everybody in a homicide case, and you know it," he said gruffly. Then to the man at the other end of the telephone wire he gave final instructions.

"Call the police garage and have them send a closed car for me, right off. I'm at Fifty-sixth just off Fifth Avenue, Highart Film Building. I'll be waiting in the main lobby, downstairs. Make it snappy, now, Tony."

He hung up and rejoined the others. "No use trying to get a taxi this time on Saturday night, in this storm," he said. "We'll have time to cash in on the game before the car gets here."

"It's stopped snowin'," said Williams, who had pulled the curtains aside and was looking out over the white-shrouded roofs of the city. "The storm's over. See, the stars are out. Everything looks so peaceful and pure—and two people have been murdered! Even though I never met Fitzgerald or Miss Lane, and only met Mr. Doane tonight, it—well, it gets me."

"It's got all of us," said Max Michaelis. "We all know Fitz—knew him, anyway—and we all love Archie. And Henderson, here . . . feeling better, old man? Want to have one of us stay with you?"

"Come along, if you like," said Dan Flaherty, with gruff kindliness.

The inventor shuddered. "No, thank you. I couldn't stand it. Even if I didn't feel as I do about Miss Lane, I would go to pieces and be a nuisance. The rest of you go on. Don't mind staying with me, anybody. I'll be all right. But I hope . . . I hope it isn't Archie . . . that did it, I mean. I thought from the way you spoke, Inspector . . ."

"Well, look at it as if you'd never heard of anybody concerned," Dan Flaherty interrupted. "A man's engaged to marry a girl. He's jealous of another man. He worries all evening because he doesn't know where the girl is, or the other man. He goes to the girl's apartment and finds the two together. Of course, he says they were both dead when he got there. But if you knew just that much and didn't know any more, whom would you suspect?"

"Now, I don't suspect Archie Doane any more than I suspect anybody else. But I'm a policeman. Friendship cuts no ice with me in a murder case. Get my point of view?"

"Of course, you have to look at it like that, Inspector," Henderson agreed. "But it doesn't sound like the sort of thing Archie Doane would do. Does it to you, Frazier?"

"No, it doesn't," the Assistant District Attorney agreed. "He was awfully upset, though, tonight, about Miss Lane."

ALABAMA DAILY DOVE BAG LIMIT REDUCED TO FIFTEEN

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Alabama's 1937-38 daily dove bag limit has been reduced from 20 to 15 and the North Alabama season will begin 15 days later than it did in 1936.

The quail season remains unchanged, November 20-February 20, as does the bag limit of 12 daily, but the State Conservation Commission has adopted the same rigid regulations as the Federal government regarding ducks.

A uniform squirrel season, October 15 to January 15, will replace a split season in effect last year, and deer hunting will be closed until 1941 in Walker and Tuscaloosa Counties.

The North Alabama dove season will operate on a split-schedule again in 1937-38, first shooting being permitted from September 15 to October 15, and the second half opening December 20 and closing January 31.

South of Tuscaloosa, Pickens, Jefferson, Shelby, Talladega, Clay and Randolph Counties the dove season will run from November 20 to January 31.

Baiting of doves and waterfowl and the use of live decoys are prohibited by new State and Federal regulations and the three-shell limit on repeating and automatic shotguns will remain in effect this season, said I. T. Quinn, Alabama conservation commissioner.

The daily bag limit on ducks during the November 27-December 26 season remains at 10, but that for geese and brant has been raised from four to five.

Shooting of waterfowl will remain from 7 a.m. until 4 p.m., and the shooting of snipe, woodcock, doves and quails from 7 a.m. until sunset.

The State Conservation Commission has sliced 38 days from the open season for catching fur bearing animals for commercial purposes. Trappers operating for market may catch animals from December 1 to January 31, instead of from November 20 to February 28. Included in this regulation are bear, beaver, civet cat, fox, mink muskrat, o'possum, otter, rabbit, racoon, skunk and weasel.

Hunting of fur bearing animals solely for game will be permitted from October 1 to January 1, except for rabbits, on which there is no closed hunting season.

Deer may be hunted in open counties from November 20 to December 31. Only antlered bucks may be killed and the limit is one a day and three a season.

Alabamians must pay a $3 State and $1 county license to hunt, while non-residents must pay $25 for a season or $5 for a trip license. A Federal duck stamp is required of all waterfowl hunters more than 16 years of age.

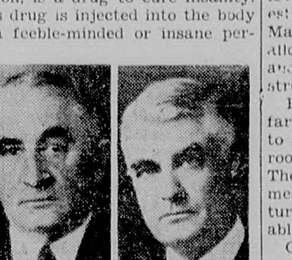
THE MAYO BROTHERS

The Ill-Wind That Wrecked A Whole Town—And May Yet Save The World From Insanity

One of the most startling discoveries in the history of medicine might never have been made if a tornado hadn't wrecked a town in Minnesota a little over a half century ago.

The town the tornado struck was Rochester, now world-famous as the home of the Mayo Brothers, two of the greatest surgeons living. And the discovery, which Doctor C. H. Mayo is still working on, is a drug to cure insanity. This drug is injected into the body of a feeble-minded or insane person and, presto! the circulation of the blood is changed and the person is restored to sanity.



Two Small-town Boys Who Became the Greatest Surgeons in the World

There are more patients suffering from mental diseases in the hospitals in the United States than from all other diseases combined. One student out of every sixteen in our high schools today will spend part of his life in an insane asylum. If you are fifteen years of age and residing in New York State, the chances are one out of twenty that you will be confined in an institution for the mentally ill for seven years of your life. During the last decade, mental diseases have almost doubled in the United States. If this appalling rate of increase continues for another century, half the entire population of the United States will be in the insane asylums and the other half will be outside trying to support them by taxes.

The Mayo Brothers, who are working on this amazing remedy, are among the most celebrated surgeons in the world. Physicians from Paris, London, Berlin, Rome, Leningrad and Tokyo journey to Rochester, Minnesota, to sit at their feet and learn. Sixty thousand patients a year, most of them facing their last chance against death, make pilgrimages to the Mayo clinic as to a Holy Shrine.

Yet, to repeat—if a tornado hadn't twisted and roared through the middle west fifty-two years ago, the world would probably never have heard of the Mayo Brothers of Rochester, Minnesota, or this cure for insanity.

When Doctor Mayo—the father of the Mayo Brothers—settled there seventy years ago, Rochester had only two thousand people. His first two patients were a sick cow and a sick horse.

When the Indian wars broke out, Doctor Mayo grabbed his musket and made the Redskins bite the dust. When the smoke of battle cleared away, he picked his way over the battle ground, laying out the dead and treating the wounded. His regular patients were scattered for fifty miles over the prairies of Minnesota. Many of them lived in houses made of prairie sod. They couldn't afford to pay a physician, but good old Doctor Mayo sometimes traveled all night to allay their aches and pains. Sometimes he fought his way through snow storms and blizzards so blinding that he couldn't see his hand before him in broad daylight.

He had two sons, William and Charles, now famous throughout the world as the Mayo Brothers.

They worked in a local drugstore, learned to fill prescriptions and pound up pills, went to medical college—and then a tragedy occurred, a tragedy destined to affect the history of medicine.

The tragedy was this: A cyclone, a tornado, swept over the prairies of Minnesota like an angry god. It blasted, it demolished, it smashed to smithereens everything in the path of its fury. It struck Rochester and knocked it into a cocked hat. Hundreds of people were wounded and twenty-three were killed. For days the Mayo Brothers and their father worked among the ruins, bandaging wounds, setting broken limbs, and performing operations. Sister Alfred, Mother Superior of the Convent Sisters of St. Francis, was so impressed with their work that she offered to build a hospital if the Mayos would take charge of it. They agreed, and when the Mayo clinic was opened in 1889, old Doctor Mayo was a man of seventy and his two sons had never even served as hospital internes.

"We were the greenest of a green crew"—that is the way they describe themselves. Yet today William Mayo, the older brother, is considered the world's greatest authority on cancer. Each brother believes the other is the greater man—and both are famous for the cleanest work that surgery has ever known. They work surely and swiftly—work with a swiftness that astonishes most surgeons. Arriving at the clinic at seven in the morning, they operate constantly for four hours every day. They have been performing from fifteen to thirty operations a day for years. And yet they both continue to study, still try to improve their work—and they admit that they have much to learn. The entire city of Rochester now exists by and for the Mayo Clinic. No street cars are allowed. The buses run silently and even the conversation in the streets is hushed.

Paupers and bank presidents, farmers and movie stars all have to take their turns in the waiting room and all are treated alike. The rich pay according to their means, but no one has ever been turned away because he was unable to pay.

One third of the Mayo Brothers' work is charity. They have never sued for bills, they never take notes, and they never permit a man to mortgage his home in order to pay them. They take in cash whatever a man can afford to pay at the time and let it go at that, and they never ask a man how much he can afford to pay before they perform the operation.

One man mortgaged his farm to pay them for saving his life; and when they discovered what he had done, they returned his check and sent him a check of their own for several hundred dollars to compensate him for the loss he had sustained in his illness.

They didn't care for fame; yet they are the most famous surgeons in the United States today.

Their sole desire has been to aid suffering humanity. Over the desk in their waiting room is a framed inscription which explains the eternal truth of their success. That sign reads: "Have something the world wants and though you dwell in the midst of a forest, it will wear a beaten pathway to your door."

OATS EXCELLENT FEED FOR SPRING MONTHS

Oats should be planted on good land in September and the first of October, advises J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist. They should be planted at the rate of two bushels per acre and the seed should be treated for smut.

Farmers wishing latest information on how to succeed with oats are advised by Mr. Lowery to see their county agents or vocational teachers who have recently been sent the latest finding of the Alabama Experiment Station.

FARMERS URGED TO SAVE SUMMER LEGUME SEED

AUBURN, Ala.—The importance of Alabama farmers harvesting cowpeas and other summer legume seed this fall is emphasized by the fact that they may be used in improving the soil and in protecting the land from erosion, in supplying food for the farm home, in making a good hay crop, and in producing a seed crop that farmers can sell for cash.

"Farmers seldom have enough cowpeas and other valuable legume seed when planting time comes," said J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist, in calling farmers' attention to the importance of saving legume seed this fall for planting next year.

IMPRESSIVE CARTOON—About the most impressive cartoon I have seen in a long time was the one appearing in last Saturday's Birmingham Age-Herald. It pictured a vast throng of people assembled before the State Capitol in Montgomery, with bowed heads and woe-begone expressions on their faces. A dog was lying in the foreground in ashamed position, and even the capitol dome was leaning away over out of plumb. The cartoon was labeled: "Tumultuous applause." The more than a column editorial accompanying the picture gave Governor Graves one of the most artistic "skinnings" in connection with his notorious appointment of his wife to the position of United States Senator to succeed Senator Hugo Black, resigned, to take his position on the bench of the United States Supreme Court, that I have ever read.

BASKETBALL—Messrs. G. A. Johnson of Opp, Route 2, and Clyde Farris of Kinston called at The Clipper office Tuesday. Mr. Farris said he intends to play on the Kinston basketball team again this season. He stated that Kinston would probably not have a championship team this year, as several of the old stars have been lost by graduation, but that there is considerable promising young material, and with such an able leader as Coach Hause at the helm, he expects the 1937-38 team to give a good account of itself. Clyde is one of the outstanding guards in Alabama.

W. M. S. CIRCLES JOINTLY ENTERTAINED MONDAY—

The two circles of the Methodist Missionary Society were jointly entertained for the fourth Monday social and program meeting in the home of Mrs. J. F. Brunson on Plant Avenue, on Monday afternoon, with Mrs. Brunson and Mrs. Dana Perdue serving as hostesses.

Baskets of lovely red radiance rosebuds were used in decorations.

Mrs. W. R. Crook presided over a short business period before the program. The society voted to resume its regular weekly meetings beginning on the first Monday in September, when a Bible Study on the book of Nehemiah will be taught by Mrs. L. P. Donovan.

Plans were made to begin a Mission Study course under the direction of Mrs. Levy Morrow in October.

A report from both circles was made of the following supplies donated to the parsonage: eight sheets, three bedspreads, three pairs of pillow cases and bedroom curtains. The Superintendent of Supplies reported cash donations and a box of supplies collected for the Methodist Community House in Mt. Vernon.

The program was opened with a prelude, "The Old Refrain," and was followed by a hymn, "O Worship the King." Mrs. Levy Morrow was the program leader and after giving the devotional from Acts 3:1-21, told interestingly the story, "Witness of the Resurrection." "Christian Missions and Rural Life" was discussed by Mrs. F. H. Murphree. "Peasant Gospel Schools in Japan" was given by Mrs. Harold Deal. Prayer by Mrs. Corrie Bryant. The closing song was "Christ Arose," after which the meeting was dismissed with the Watchword.

At the conclusion of the program, a delightful social hour was enjoyed, during which time the hostesses served a delicious iced course and cookies to the large group of members assembled.

Miss Ruby Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Brown, was carried to Edge Hospital in Troy last Wednesday night, where she is under treatment for toxic poisoning. Late reports state that she is slowly inproving and friends trust that she may soon be able to return home.

Miss Sara Shealy has returned from a visit to Montgomery.
